The little ones died instantly. Then the father turned the weapon on himself and inflicted a wound which caused his death several hours later.

French could not look in the faces of the little girls as he took their lives. He shot them in the back of their heads. It is the theory of the police that he kept up the deception of having "something funny" to tell them, and even made them close their eyes while he prepared the "surprise" for

He went to stay with friends in Stamford, Conn., but returned Saturday and said he felt much better and intended going back to Stamford for a month.

French was devoted to his two daughters and seemed to regret having to leave them behind while on the trip to Stamford. He told them to be sure to write to him often, and then went to his room, saying he was going to pack up his belongings. A few minutes after he had gone upstairs he called to the girls to come upstairs to the attic, as he had a present for

They scrambled up as fast as they could and, after reaching the attic. e door was closed and locked. A mo ment later Mrs. French heard a shot fired in the attic, followed by screams from one of the girls. Then another shot was fired and the screams stop ped. The mother rushed to the attic. and just as she reached the door a third shot was fired.

Mrs. French rushed out of the house and summoned neighbors. The attic door was broken down and the bodies of the girls found. French, with a revolver still clutched in his right hand. was unconscious, with a bullet hole in his temple. A physician was sent for, but the man could not live.

The only reason that Mrs. French can assign for the tragedy is that her husband went insane at the thought of parting with his two daughters during his stay in Stamford. Both the little girls were very pretty and favortes with the neighbors.

French was prosperous and his house is situated in the residential district of the town. He was a member of the First Presbyterian church, an officer in the Sunday school an president of the Men's Brotherhood, one of he church organizations.

THEY BORED HIM.

And They Came Mighty Near Boring Him Again With Lead.

The dread of boredom is strongly characteristic of the present age, but few hate it with such intensity as the artist who lived in Paris in the days of the commune and of whom C. E. Maryland Police Fail to Prevent Halle speaks in his "Notes of Painter's Life."

"A friend of mine." says Mr. Halle, "told me that he was in the studio of an artist when it was visited by a detachment of soldiers. The usual question about the possession of arms was asked and answered in the negative, but one of the soldiers found a gun in the corner of the studio, and on his evidence fre owner was told that he must come out and be shot. My friend was very fond of him, so he asked to be allowed to see the gun. It was given to him, and with the help of a pencil he passed his handkerchief a few inches down the barrel and brought it out brown with rust. He pointed out that if the gun had been used the inside of the barrel must have been black with powder and not brown with rust, so the artist was

"My friend asked the artist why he had not himself suggested this simple test, and all the answer he got was: 'Oh, they bored me. I would rather any day be shot than bored."

"FLETCHERISM"

The habit of chewing one's food antil it becomes almost liquified and swallowed involuntarily, and eating certain foods at certain times of the day is called "Fletcherism" after a man named Fletcher who advocates this method as a remedy for indigestion and stomach troubles. While one may get from this system the minimum amount of food, it is a question as to what extent this principle of living can be applied to the human race as a whole. It is an old meat is another man's poison."

Latham and Drexel Make Exhibition Flights Before Large Crowd-Repairing Storm Damage.

Baltimore, Nov. 7.-The Baltimore aviation meet, interrupted by the storm of last Thursday, which wrecked both hangars and damaged a number of the aeroplanes stored in them, was resumed Sunday afternoon in the presence of a large crowd. But the troubles of the promoters were not at an end. Large numbers of excursionists came from distant points and knowing that they would be here it was determined to resume the program, notwithstanding the comm s sioners of Baltimore county, witain which division of the state the av ation field lies, had declared that in y would not permit Sunday flig. s. Tax possibility of police interference also doubtless reduced the attendance considerably.

However, the county police cont n ed themselves with arresting half a score ticket sellers and other officials who were taken before a neighbor n justice of the peace and released under small bail.

The county commissioners are said to have acted under a very old "blue law," which, according to a prominent attorney, would, if strictly enforced, prevent a salaried clergyman holding a church service on Sunday.

The aviators had not made as good progress as was anticipated in repairing the damage to their aeroplanes caused by the collapse of the hangars Thursday night, so that there were no formal contests.

Hubert Latham made three exhib tion figihts, one of them being for al titude, in which he scored 2100 feet.

J. Armstrong Drexel reached the field late, but shortly after arriving made a try for altitude and reached a height of 3500 feet. Both flyers reported very low temperature high above the earth. The wind had been as high as twenty miles an hour early in the day, but during the later flights was never above twelve miles.

Announcement of Saturday next as an added day was made by Colone Jerome H. Joyce, president of the aviation committee.

Washington, Nov. 7 .- President Taff and friends of the administration are looking forward with keen anxiety to the results of tomorrow's elections They believe that the president's political future will depend largely upon the outcome. Mr. Taft's advisers acknowledge that if the Republicans are badly beaten in his own state and the house goes Democratic besides, it will be a blow that will seriously handicap efforts to make the president the party leader in 1912. They don't believe, however, that a Republican defeat in New York state will in any way re flect upon the Taft administration. A Pawned Watch

It Was at the Bottom of

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

"Goodby, Harold." "Goodby, Alice."

These, and these alone, were the parting words between Harold Rothwell and Alice Swain, for their hearts were too full to say more. They were to have been married within a few months, but Rothwell had developed pulmonary trouble, and it was decided that he should go west and live an outdoor life. The prospect before them was gloomy. Even if Harold recovered his health the giving up of prospects he was leaving might keep him in poverty and necessitate their continued separation. He turned away and set out for the railway station. Alice watched him till he reached a bend in the road, when he turned and threw her a kiss. She returned it, and he passed out of sight. Sad as they were, they would have been far more so had they known what would happen before they should meet again.

That same day two years hence found Rothwell financial manager for Henry Palmer, a rancher, though but just appointed to the position. Rothwell had long been a sheep herder for Palmer, and the out of door life bad completely cured him of his ailing. As soon as it was considered safe for him to lead a more confined life Palmer, who had taken a great fancy to him and who needed a clerk, put him in charge of the financial part of his ranching. Then Rothwell wrote to Alice Swain that within another year he hoped to return for her and bring her back with him. The ranch was not a large one, and the owner and his clerk were the only two persons engaged upon it except a few herders, who were always away in care of the flocks. The men became very warm friends and were almost constantly together. One day Palmer said to his clerk:

"You know, Harold, that I am a pachelor and have no one in the world o leave what belongs to me. I'm going to make a will bequeathing this anch and the stock on it to you."

Rothwell smiled. "Considering that you are but ten years older than I and far stronger, I think I would better leave my possessions, if I had any, to

"There is a better chance than you think," said the other.

Rothwell looked at him inquiringly, but received no further confidence. Palmer replaced the box, and the two men returned to the lower story. Then Palmer opened a safe kept on the Rothwell that it was in his favor, put t back and closed the safe door.

"Why." asked Rothwell, "don't you keep the bonds and the other things

"I have a special reason for not keeping the bonds there. As to the watch and jeweis, it doesn't much day you may learn the reason. So long as I live I can trust you not to disturb the box in the garret, and after my death what it contains may be of some benefit other than for their intrinsic value."

"That will appear at the time."

This was not very satisfactory, but Rothwell was obliged to be satisfied that Rothwell, having got in some deposit the money in bank. The day wo masked men sprang upon him from a wood beside the road and robbed him. Returning to the ranch, the premises and the body. When Rothwell had told him the whole story of his connection with Palmer, concluding with the statement that he was Palmer's heir, that he had started for the bank that day to the way and returned to find his benefactor murdered, the official looked at him curiously. Then he called s brought the sheriff with him, who without a word of explanation, clapped a pair of handcuis on Rothwell's wrists. The prisoner was taken to town and lodged in jail, charged with the murder of Henry Palmer and the he had intended to put in the bank. The case was one of circumstantial evidence-or, rather, of motive-alone.

the amount of which he claimed he had been robbed and, fearing that if detected he would lose his inheritance, had killed the man whose property he would inherit.

This made a strong case against him, and there was very little to be said in his favor. No trace of any one having attacked Palmer and no evidence of Rothwell's story that he had been robbed appeared. The court retained charge of Palmer's property, but allowed the legatee sufficient funds to pay a lawyer to defend him. His attorney did the best in his power! for him, but was unable to establish his innocence. The jury hung for some time between murder in the first and second degree, but finally brought in a verdict of guilty of the former. He was sentenced to suffer the death penalty.

And so it was that Rothwell, having escaped death from tuberculosis, having reached a condition where he might bring his sweetheart to him as his wife, was doomed to suffer on the gallows for a crime he had not comunitted. There are not the delays in punishment for crime in new countries there are where the safeguards against infringing on the rights of accused persons are more strictly enforced. Rothwell was sentenced to be hanged a few weeks after his conviction. No new trial was granted, no stay of proceedings, and the day of doom was near when something happened.

A young woman stood looking in through the window of a pawnshop in the town where Rothwell was convicted. At the time an officer of the law dressed in plain clothes was in the shop interviewing the pawnbroker about some stolen goods that he had loaned money on. The woman entered the shop and produced a watch on which she asked for a loan. The bro ker inspected the watch and at once caught sight of two letters, "H. P.,"
